'Tick, Tick ... Boom!'

Rated: PG-13, for some strong language, some suggestive material and drug references.

Running time: 1 hour, 55 minutes.

Playing: In limited release; starts streaming Nov. 19 on Netflix.

The Times is committed to reviewing theatrical film releases during the COVID-19 pandemic. Because moviegoing carries risks during this time, we remind readers to follow health and safety guidelines as outlined by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and local health officials. "Tick, Tick ... Boom!," a 2021 movie based on a 2001 stage musical retooled from a 1990 one-man show, tells a simple story with a complicated genealogy. The one-man show told the story of a musical that was ultimately never produced, written by a guy whose next musical became a Broadway phenomenon. And now it's a Netflix movie, directed by the creative force behind a completely different Broadway phenomenon. Got all that? No worries if not. The movie, blessedly and sometimes blissfully, is easier to watch than it is to put into words. And that's

We are also caught up in something of a "Rent" origin story, which I hope doesn't scare you off. As a show, "Rent" proved nearly as divisive as it was popular: Maybe it enraptured you with its earnest, impassioned paean to art, love and East Village living, and maybe it struck you as a loathsome example of mass culture devouring the counterculture ("commodified faux bohemia on a platter," as Carina Chocano put it in her Times review of the lousy 2005 movie adaptation). In any event, you needn't have any fondness for "Rent" — though a little doesn't hurt — to be taken with the affectionately cracked "Tick, Tick ... Boom!"

The 50 Best Musical Movies to Get You Singing

All the dance numbers! All the show tunes!

By Lori Keong, Amanda Mitchell, Ineye Komonibo.

Published December 20, 2021

Although the traditionally frothy romantic comedies are an easy way to chase away the Sunday scaries, there's nothing more warm and fuzzy than a solid musical movie, complete with singalongs and high-energy dance numbers. Who doesn't like feeling like the world is capable of a little magic, featuring the most epic duets, dance sequences, and jazz hands of all time. music

Pitch Perfect (2012)

Okay, yes, the film is technically about Anna Kendrick's Beca as the reluctant a cappella singer, but the true joy of this film is the artistry at work on screen.
